A Value Argument Against Incompatibilism

Mi., 16. 11. 2016, 18.00 Uhr s.t.,
Seminarraum VI (Karl-Rahner-Platz 3)

Incompatibilism is the view that free will is incompatible with determinism. If an action is free, then it is not determined and vice-versa. However, given facts about both human psychology and the value of free will, incompatibilism is false. This is because we would want to be free but we would not want to be indeterminated, and hence freedom can't require indeterminism.

Justin McBrayer is an American philosopher who works in ethics and philosophy of religion. His work includes edited volumes on the problem of evil and skeptical theism as well as a textbook in ethics. Dr. McBrayer thinks it's important for philosophers to talk with normal people, too, and so some of his work tries to bring philosophical clarity to popular issues. www.justinmcbrayer.com
